[Communicated.] A Cabinet in a Cocoanut.

There has been a very persistent rumor around town about the formation of a new cabinet, in which there figures noted members of the bench and the bar, of commerce and of finance. At this we have greatly wondered-the formation of a new cabinet before we had a new King—and we have felt curious to ascertain the foundation for this very confidentially whispered semi-official rumor. With this object in has almost view we have interviewed the Rev. Phillip Buster, the newly appointed Vicar of Bray, and chaplain to factured article. His Highness the Lord Nozoo; -- and the worthy Reverend furnishes us with the following interesting man-somebody to put up and pull down. He and well authenticated statement of facts:

On Friday last a tidal wave of office-seekers had inundated the city mansion of our popular Prince. Every privacy of his home was invaded;—his court yard crammed; -and the Palace walk blockaded. The presence of one of our dauntless beaks was invoked in order to disperse the importunate crowd. Meanwhile His Royal Highness like a celebrated American General, resolved upon a change of base, which he promptly executed by way of the back premises, and effected a safe retreat to Waikiki, his country seat by the sea.

The gallant Prince whilst indulging in a much needed, recuperating siesta, was congratulating him-self upon his masterly and successful strategy,—

When suddenly his attention and successful strategy,—

Blood Wolfe's Ale, Pints and quarts,
Blood Wolfe's Porter, pints. when suddenly, his attention was aroused by a faithful henchman, and following the direction of a pointed finger, beheld to his dismay, a cloud of dust approaching from the city.

The kanaka cries: "Aia na haole hoopilimeai, nui wale." Yonder's the foreign lick-spittles, a

Our brave Prince, like a man of action, and prompt decision, sprang instantly to his feet. He cast a swift glance around. He thought first of the sea, thinking to test his native skill in diving; but then he reflected he could not keep his head under water long enough to baffle the search of the office-seekers, and prevent their putting a head on to him. He thought of the cellar; but there was none on that beach. He thought of his father. He thought of his mother. Of his home, and his little ones; and beat his princely breast in the agony of a bored man's despair. But all is not lost,—a happy thought;—he thinks of his ancestral cocoanuts; and he with powerful limbs quickened with new energies by the approach of the toadying, boring crew, nimbly climbed the lofty stem, and ensconced himse'f among the towering blades of foliage The office-seeking crowd arrive; and they smilingly enquire of a seemingly sleepy kanaka concerning his "Aohe!" And both palms are turned down with an emphatic negative. "Vamosed the ranch" is the cry. They disperse and search in every direction. One watches the sea; another peers into a well; but presently a valiant officer of the Hawaiian army cries: "I have treed

The eager company flocking together, with up-turned gaze surround the cocoanut. At their head is an elderly gentleman, who presides with so much dignity on all public occasions, and who has a very poor opinion of the Prince when in Whitney's, but a better one when with His Highness. And he thus addresses at the top of his voice, the Prince on the We came to congratulate your Highness upon
